Superintendent's message

Mr. Meneely

This year the graduating class has the distinction of being-last-and yet first. Our graduates were the last class of seniors enrolled in the decade of the nineteen-sixties-they are the first class to receive their diplomas as River View High School begins a new decade.

Graduates, you are completing one phase of your formal education and are on the threshold of inaugurating the next important phase of your intellectual development. For many this means a continuation of scholarly endeavor--some will welcome the responsibilities of marriage and parenthood--others will dedicate a portion of their life to the armed forces of our nation to insure our many freedoms.

All will embark on the numerous and varied routes that men have followed for centuries in charting a course upon the sea of life. You seek a way of life and the means to improve this life. Regardless of the course you choose--each one will have ample opportunity to contribute to the advancement of society.

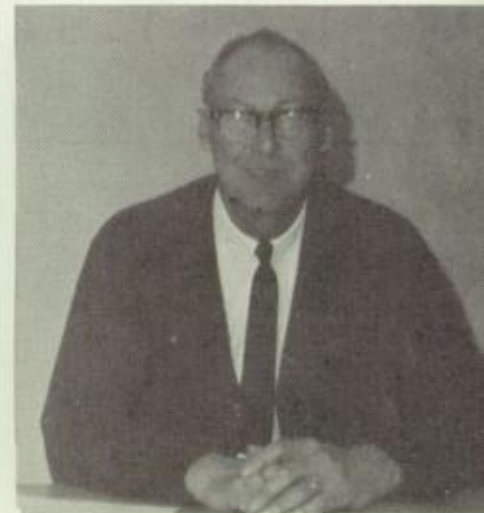

The future is yours--you are the captain of the vessel that bears you name.

Prophecy

The Remains of 70's Class

This story all began while I was on guard duty flying through town and country. I was admiring a band of horses as I flew over them, and CRUNCH--I flew smack dab into a Russian Olive Tree. After disengaging myself from this thorny shrub, I discovered my left wing was somewhat damaged. As a matter of fact, I couldn't fly. (Such a detestable predicament for an angel to be in!)

There was nothing else for me to do except walk back the way I had come. I had just come back to the band of horses when I spotted two women who appeared to be pestering one of the horses. I drew nearer to investigate and low and behold, one of them was a veterinarian, Dr. Cynthia Glines. And the other was Joan Rieckman! I ran to greet them. "Hi Cyn and Joan. Where have you been all these years? What a coincidence, us meeting like this!"

"Joan," Dr. Glines was saying, "This horse is simply too old to be helped much."

"But I can't just let her die," cried Joan.

"Hey you two," I broke in. But they didn't hear, or rather, they didn't know someone from "beyond" was trying to talk with them. I followed them to Joan's house. As we entered, the phone was ringing. It happened to be a call from none other than Jan Corder. She and Noreen Unruh were hostessing a party that very night. It was, she said, to be a sort of reunion of the class of 1970. They expected a big turnout since the menu offered coffee, tea, or LSD. Joan and Cynthia agreed to come early and help them prepare.

I, too, arrived at the party early, via the antenna of Dr. Glines' car. Activity was buzzing everywhere. Two fellows were strumming guitars on a ping pong table; and with the first chords of vocal song I recognized them, the "WALAUGHT." Yes that was them, John Wallace and Dave Vaught. They weren't even charging their customary 50%; they remembered (or rather, Noreen remembered) that they owed our class some free entertainment from our last Senior sponsored Sockhop of good old '70.

It wasn't long before people began to stream in. One of the first couples were the Darby's, Nancy and George. They looked swell as they chatted pleasantly with their hostesses, Jan and Noreen. Not far behind Nancy and George came Lon Lechelt, all smiles and no reserves as he too was welcomed by the hostesses. Others came strolling in and were warmly greeted. In my anxiety to see all my old classmates I didn't see that someone had moved a chair, catching the end of my robe beneath it, and than sat down. I was stuck. The man sitting in the chair was none other than Steve Grimshaw--freckles and all. Steve was very preoccupied with the newest arrival, Dixie Pidcock.

"Exactly what is your line of work," Dixie asked Steve.

"Well, quite frankly," he said, "I'm managing Vice-President of P and C Distribution Corporation.

"And what does P and C stand for?"

"Why," Steve exclaimed, "Pollywog and Cricket, of course. We distribute them to ponds and marshes throughout the United States. It's a very busy job. Keeps me on the go all the time".

As Steve finished talking Gail Seaton walked by and he gave her his chair.

"Hello there Gail," chirped Dixie. "Isn't the latest hair style just marvelous?"

"Yes, rather" Gail replied. "It's the style I've always looked forward to. I always had trouble with hair; it's better now without it."

"Hey, here comes Connie Cook" said someone behind me.

Sure enough. It was Connie. She had no sooner arrived when they all went to the refreshment tables, to inspect the center pieces. I made my escape from the grasp of the chair. Before long I found myself hemmed in by some more old classmates: Carol Crabtree, Shirley Davis, Larry Price, Al Slavic and Dale Oswalt.

They all were smoking cigarettes, each of a different color. At first I worried about my wings being in the very midst of all those cigarettes, but soon I had become thoroughly absorbed in the delicious scent of those cigarettes.

Dale was explaining these peculiar cigarettes. "It took a long time, and a lot of figuring but I finally did it. I invented the vitamin cigarette!"

"Vitamin cigarettes, huh?" asked Shirley as she took another puff.

"Yep," answered Dale, "The minimum adult daily vitamin requirements are contained in each pack of these cigarettes."

"You've revolutionized the world of smoking," Carl stated.

"Hey Al, Larry" Dale attracted their attention, "In my car is a box of these cigarettes. Why don't you give everyone a pack." And before long Jan and Noreen changed the menu to read "coffee, tea, or Vitamin D."

The party was really beautiful. Everyone was having a rip-roarin' time. Charlotte Darby and Eileen Gilchrist arrived a little late, as did a few others, but they made it never the less. I wasn't too surprised to hear that Eileen was now Mrs. James Halverson--which is, technically, a Darby. That made a total of four Darbys at the party. The more the merrier.

It was getting to be that time when everyone began to realize that they had appetites. So the crowd shifted to the tables of food. Darlene Shoemaker and Janice Woods were serving their friends; filling plate after plate with food and more food, and yet more. Amidst the sound of silverware and growling stomachs I heard someone say, "All I want is two boiled eggs and a grapefruit." It was Sherrie Tracy, diet and all. I was so glad to see her I hurried over and gave her a friendly sock on the shoulder.

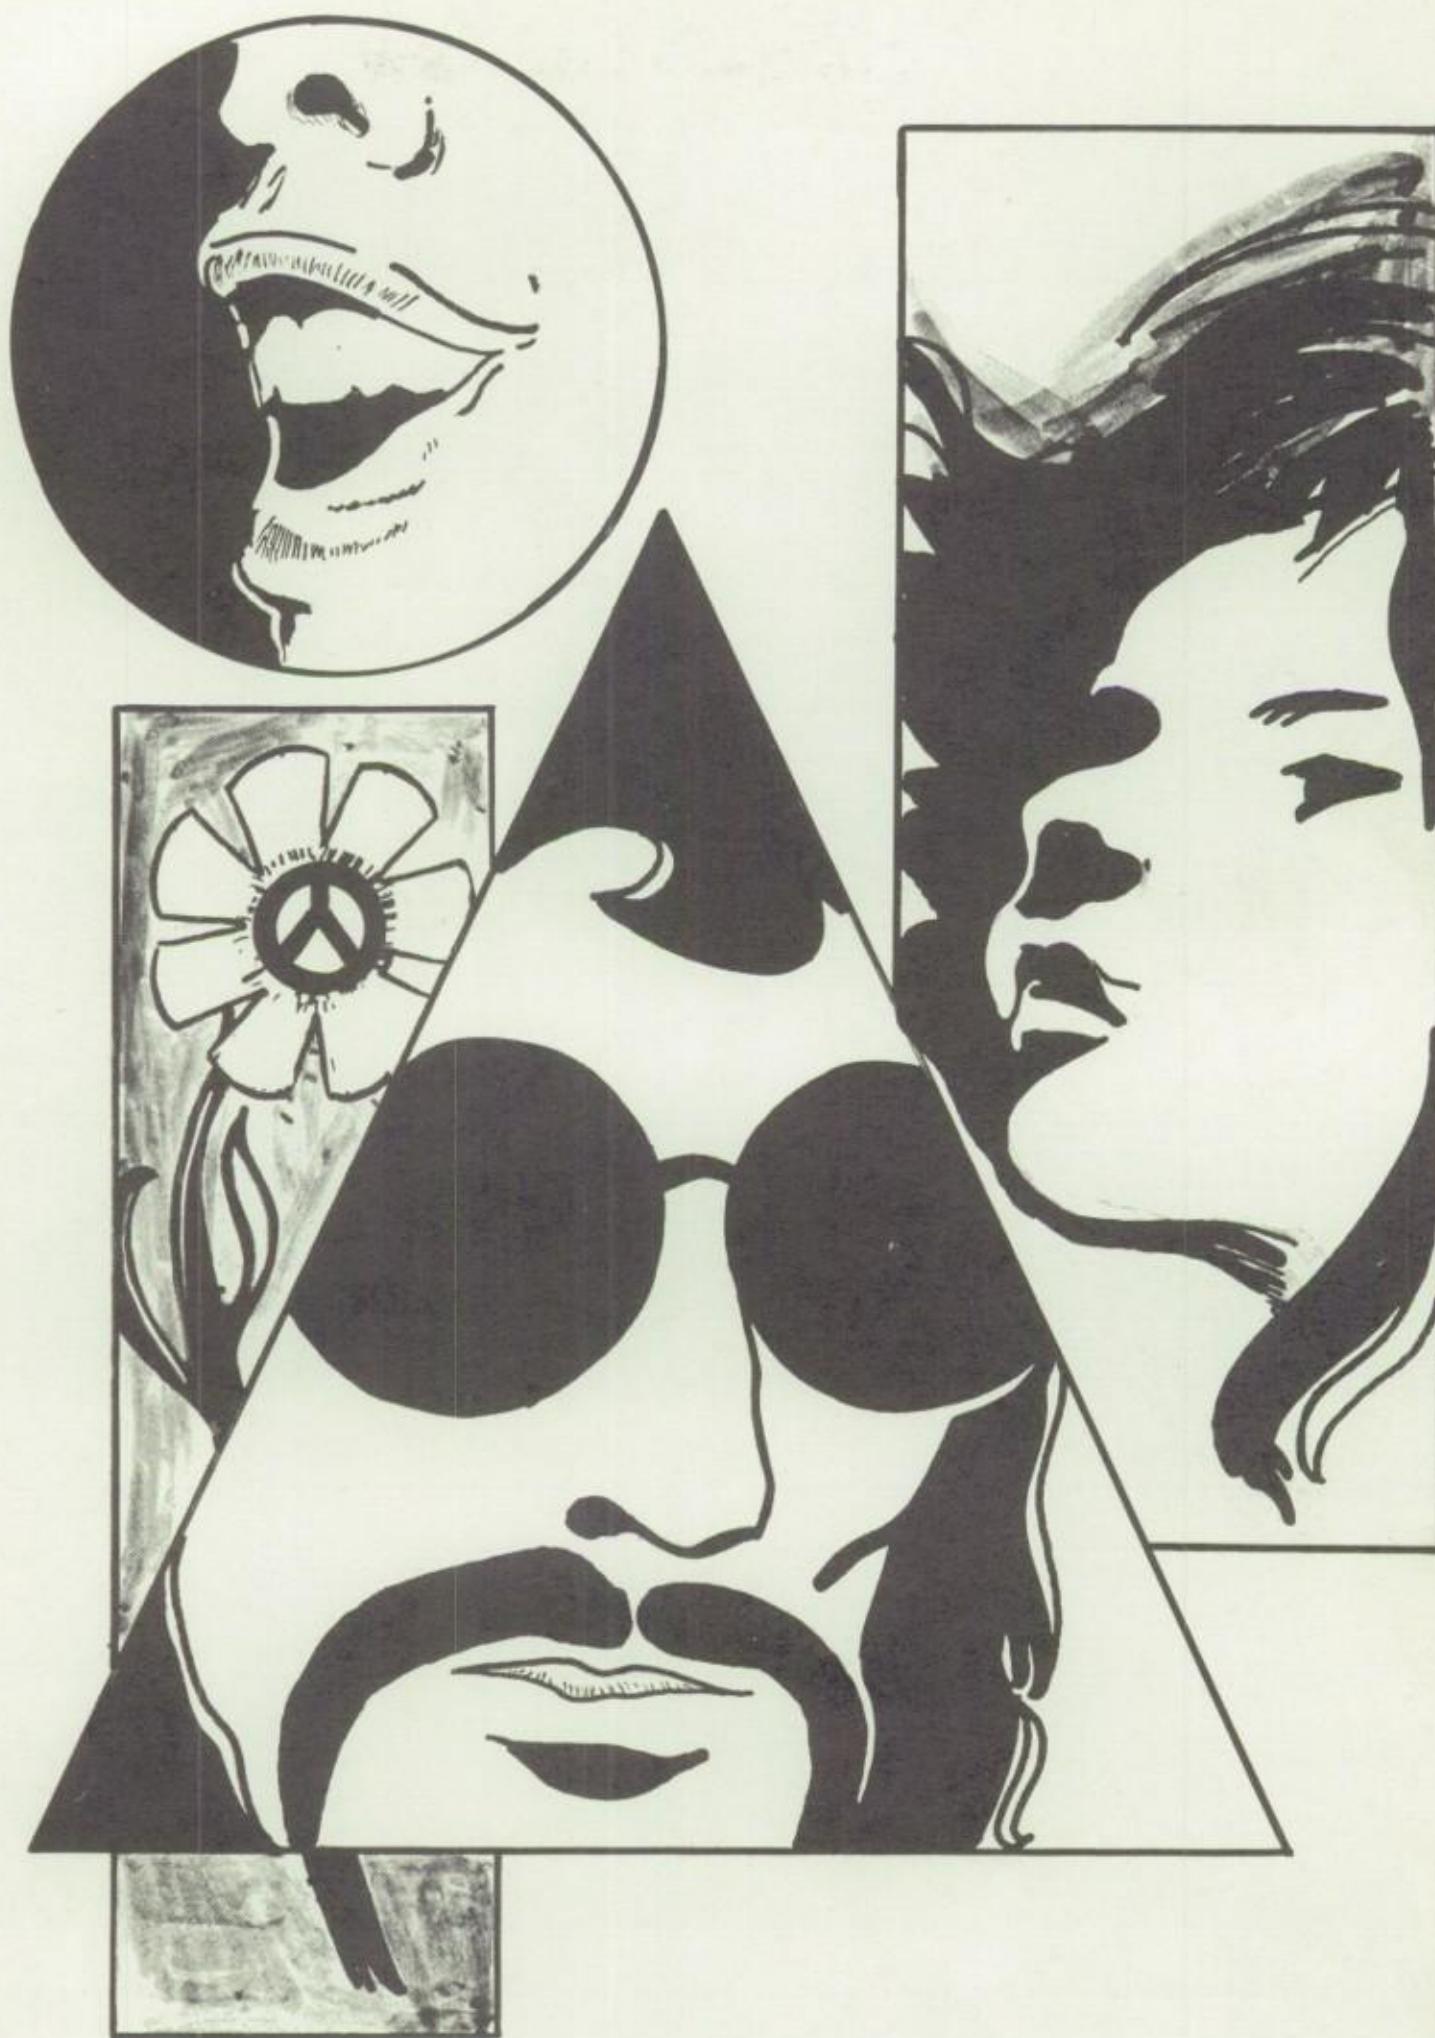

"Ouch," Sherrie said as she turned to see who had hit her. It worried her that no one was there to hit her. But she didn't let it bother her. Everyone was pulling up chairs in a sort of irregular circle and eating and talking, and just plain having a fine time. I could hear Steve Goodnight and Larry Lang talking above the normal buzz of the crowd, but I couldn't tell exactly what they were saying because I had again been caught on a chair. It happened to be Rosetta Goodnight's chair. She was telling Connie about her physical education students at the old home school. "Man," Rosetta exclaimed, "it sure is hard to sit on the bench throughout a game of basketball." Just then Janice came up and asked Rosetta to help her in the kitchen for a moment. This was my opportunity to escape. I quickly tipped the chair back and untangled my robe from it. I was free again and I began to think it was time to find my way out of the party.

"Say," someone said, "Where is Lois Blair?"

And here came the answer. "She developed an acute allergy to horses a few years back, but she wouldn't quit horsing around and it caught up with her a few months ago." There was a moment of silence--in which they all wondered if I went North or South.

Well, it was late and my wing was feeling fine by now, so with one long, last look at all the beautiful graduates of '70, I departed.

Thus it was today--tomorrow's yesterday.
